Economic Security Department, which led the organization's initiatives aimed at empowering vulnerable populations, particularly women and internally displaced persons (IDPs). By fostering these strategic partnerships, HSFAN successfully mobilized a diverse array of actors to promote sustainable change and address the needs of the most marginalized communities.

At the regional level, HSFAN worked closely with the Regional Delegation of Women's Empowerment and the Family, a partnership that enhanced the organization's outreach and capacity to deliver skill development and empowerment programs for women. This collaboration allowed for the creation of targeted initiatives that equipped women with the tools and knowledge necessary to improve their livelihoods and gain economic independence. Additionally, by aligning efforts with the regional delegation, HSFAN was able to ensure that its activities complemented broader regional policies on gender equality and women's empowerment, driving systemic change within the region.

HSFAN also worked in close partnership with regional medical officers to ensure healthcare access for vulnerable populations. These collaborations focused on improving healthcare delivery, especially for IDPs, women, and children, by facilitating access to essential medical services, including reproductive health care, vaccinations, and trauma care. By coordinating with local health authorities, HSFAN was able to provide comprehensive, timely support to communities in need, mitigating the health risks exacerbated by displacement and conflict.

At the sub-regional level, HSFAN's efforts expanded through partnerships with district medical offices, local councils, and traditional leaders. These collaborations were pivotal in fostering grassroots initiatives and ensuring that responses were tailored to the specific needs of local communities. Working closely with district medical offices, HSFAN contributed to enhancing healthcare access and awareness campaigns, especially around WASH (Water, Sanitation, and Hygiene) issues that have a direct impact on public health. By collaborating with local councils and traditional leaders, the organization leveraged existing community structures to ensure that interventions were culturally relevant and widely accepted by the population.

Community-based organizations (CBOs) also played a vital role in supporting HSFAN's work. These local organizations were key partners in the delivery of services and implementation of development programs, particularly in rural and hard-to-reach areas. CBOs helped to ensure that HSFAN's interventions were aligned with community priorities and that they had the local knowledge necessary to address the unique challenges facing vulnerable groups. By working in close coordination with these grassroots entities, HSFAN was able to deliver sustainable development outcomes that were both impactful and rooted in local realities.

Through these multi-tiered partnerships, HSFAN was able to make significant strides in its programmatic areas, including agriculture, education, WASH, and economic security. In agriculture, for example, the organization collaborated with local agricultural experts and farmers' associations to implement initiatives that enhanced food security and promoted sustainable farming practices. In education, HSFAN worked with local education authorities to provide training for teachers and support for students, particularly those from vulnerable backgrounds. The organization's WASH programs, which focused on improving access to clean water and sanitation facilities, benefited from strong partnerships with local health and environmental agencies to ensure long-term, sustainable impact.

Overall, the collaborative efforts in 2024 allowed HSFAN to align its programs with national goals and strategies for sustainable development. By working alongside government agencies, local authorities, and community-based organizations, HSFAN was able to contribute to the achievement of national and international development objectives, particularly those set out by the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). These collaborations not only enhanced the effectiveness of HSFAN's interventions but also ensured that the organization's work was integrated into broader development frameworks, contributing to long-term systemic change and resilience-building in the South West Region of Cameroon.
